

The New Yorker
September 26, 2011

GAGOSIAN GALLERY

PHOTO BOOTH

The view from The New Yorker's photo department

September 26, 2011

EYE ON CULTURE: RICHARD SERRA'S NEW SCULPTURES

Posted by Jessie Wender

For this week's Goings On About Town opener, Martine Fougeron photographed Richard Serra's new sculptures, currently on view at Gagosian Gallery in Chelsea. "Serra's steel articulations are sublime, and seemed to induce a quasi-mystical experience of awe and bewilderment in people," Fougeron told me. "Time seemed to stop as they deambulated into the gigantic Canyon de Chelly-like copper spirals. That is the feeling I was after." Here's a selection of her photographs.

